It ran from I-75 at exit 150 in US Highway 23/Dixie Highway in Vicksburg to Interstate 69 at exit 215 in New Buffalo. The northern terminus of the route is now a parking lot used by the Vicksburg Nature Center in Vicksburg. M-125 was signed as a north-south corridor across the Delta from West Michigan, and was designated by 1952 as part of the Interstate Highway System. History The route was designated in 1952 by SARA to connect US 23/Dixie Highway in Vicksburg to Interstate 69 in New Buffalo. The route was discontinued in 1995 by DPH in northern Cheboygan County as a cost-cutting measure. The former alignment of M-125 was redesignated as part of US 23; the US 23 designation followed the original I-75 alignment as well as the location of the freeway construction in the late 1950s and early 1960s. In 2012, the Michigan Department of Transportation replaced the alignment of US 23/Dixie Highway with US 23 Business (Dixie Highway) from the Cheboygan County line to US 31/US 41/M-28 in downtown Cheboygan. As part of the July 3, 2012, roadname announcement in Genesee County, the route of M-125 (Dixie Highway) was changed to be concurrent with US 31 between a bridge over the Manitowoc River and exit 7 of the former M-124 (US 31 Business) in Port Huron. Many of those fights, though, aren't simply about right or wrong, but rather about which side has the right to dominate. And therein lies the source of the tension in the US. The establishment Republicans, for example, need to be careful not to challenge the domineering power of the donor class. And this means, they have to be careful not to rock the boat and to be on their best behaviour. The patron-client relationship is at the heart of the party, and the donor class pays the bills. Those on the right that are opposed to the economic domination of the donor class are therefore marginalised in Republican party strategy. And those on the left that are opposed to the donor class are therefore marginalised in Democratic party strategy. The libertarian movement is the only force that has been trying to hold back the forces of domination and replace it with a more progressive form of economic organisation. But while it has been fighting against the neoconservative branch of the establishment Republican party, it hasn't been very visible within the Democratic party. An article in Foreign Policy recently asked "How the Republicans lost the West", focusing on the question of why the right-wing Republican party was defeated in the 2016 presidential election. His answer was that the West just didn't really care about the battle for influence between the establishment and the insurgent factions in the Republican party. In one sense, that was a fair answer. US foreign policy is now so unpopular that fewer and fewer people are supporting it, regardless of whether they are left, right or centre. And few people particularly care about the Republican versus Democrat battle for power at the end of the day. The big question now is whether the libertarian movement can reach out and work with the progressive wing of the Democratic party and actually be able to forge a majoritarian, bipartisan consensus against the donor class and its role as economic domineer. And it's this consensus that the libertarian movement needs to fight for if it is to avoid being marginalised yet again. The donor class has a role to play in the form of f678ea9f9e
