Multiple integration of a transgene in transgenic rice is facilitated by the rice nuclear transport factor 2. To analyze how transgenes are integrated into the plant genome and to understand the mechanisms involved in transgene integration, we examined how the insertion of a transgene in the genome of plants is affected by the site of transgene insertion. We have identified a nuclear transport factor 2 (NTF2) gene that is highly homologous to the human NTF2 gene. The expression of NTF2 is ubiquitous in rice, with a higher level of expression in the meristematic region and the root tip. The two-component protein bZIP63, which has the DNA-binding domain of the human NTF2 gene, is encoded in the rice genome and is ubiquitously expressed. In this study, transgenes were introduced into the rice genome in various ways. The amount of transgene integration was increased by two-component protein bZIP63 with the NTF2 gene when it was co-introduced with the transgene into rice. The NTF2 protein may play a role in the integration of the transgene into the rice genome.
